KEYSTONE ENTERPRISE SERVICES TO POWER LEHIGH UNIVERSITY'S LIVE NATIONWIDE DISTANCE LEARNING VIA SATELLITE

Master's Degree and Professional Development Courses Delivered To Company Sites

June 22, 2009 - Salt Lake City, UT -- Keystone Enterprise Services, the leader in satellite enterprise video services, announced a strategic distance education partnership with Lehigh University of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. Lehigh University will enhance its distance learning educational program using Keystone's interactive satellite-training network.

The service transmits Graduate courses live from studio classrooms located on the Lehigh campus to Keystone client sites and elsewhere. Students can see and hear all aspects of the course presentation, and communicate with the instructor by phone-bridge.

According to Peg Portz, Director of Distance Education at Lehigh, "Partnering with Keystone Enterprise Services and integrating our distance programming not only meets our service needs. We can also provide Keystone clients access to the full range of quality educational programs that we offer: a clear value-added benefit of being part of the Keystone network."

Companies and professionals recognize the value of Lehigh's programs. For example, Paul Krolikowski, Merck and Co. Inc., said "As a Distance Ed student, my experience at Lehigh has been extremely rewarding and certainly challenging. The advantages of the satellite program were invaluable to me and gave the flexibility I needed as a research scientist."

"With Lehigh University's courses now offered on our satellite platforms, we can deliver even more value to our customers," said Dan Loveless, Senior Vice President of Sales for Keystone Enterprise Services.

Lehigh University is a leader in the field of offering Graduate degrees and certificates by distance. It develops, delivers and supports distance education programs nationwide that allow companies to cost-effectively develop workforce skills and provide professional training. The distance education programs at Lehigh University provide students with the same level of educational excellence for which Lehigh University is renowned. Students can earn a Master's degree or take selected courses for credit or professional development.
